

In year one, NCCD commenced construction on 150 new public housing units. All material packages have arrived, and construction is underway in most communities. NCCD is on schedule for completion of all 150 units within the next 12 months.

“Our organization is committed to mobilizing Inuit-owned and Northern resources to build homes by and for Nunavummiut,” said NCCD chief executive officer and president Clarence Synard. “The Nunavut 3000 Strategy includes meaningful and effective training programs that will ensure we lead in the development of skills for Inuit who are interested in a career in trades. Specifically, we have an Inuit labour target of 30 per cent for our negotiated partnership contracts for public housing units and see this as an opportunity to increase training and capacity development for Inuit in the construction trades sector.”

The total estimated cost of the Igluliuqatigiingniq Nunavut 3000 Strategy is $2.57 billion to create up to 3,000 housing units across the territory by 2030, with a target of approximately $890 million (35 per cent) in private sector investment and approximately $1.68 billion (65 per cent) in public sector investment.
