People with the norovirus illness usually develop symptoms of gastroenteritis within 24 to 48 hours, but symptoms can start as early as 12 hours after exposure. The illness often begins suddenly. Even after having the illness, you can still become re-infected by norovirus.

The main symptoms of the norovirus illness are diarrhea, vomiting (children usually experience more vomiting than adults), nausea and stomach cramps. Other symptoms may include low-grade fever, headache, chills, muscle aches and fatigue (a general sense of tiredness). Most people feel better in one or two days, with symptoms resolving on their own and experiencing zero long-term health effects. As with any illness causing diarrhea or vomiting, people who are ill should drink plenty of liquids to

People with symptoms can be cared for at home unless the symptoms become severe and involve weakness or dehydration. People with severe symptoms should seek medical advice from their health provider.
